

Imagine. Envision. Write. Revise. Submit. Read.

from yareview.net (Young Adult Review Network)

The process of writing is quite solitary, but the process of finding an audience for your writing requires reaching out - convincing someone else that what you have written is worth reading. Here are a few tips and resources to help you improve your writing, discover your voice and find an audience.

ASK AND LEARN

Most authors have websites with email addresses. Many authors, especially those who write for children and teens, respond personally. Ask how they started to publish their writing, where they get their ideas, how to solve a particular problem in your own writing, if they offer writing workshops for young people. In the Washington area, you can find many children's authors on the website for the Children's Book Guild of Washington, D.C. (www.childrensbookguild.org), as well as advice for aspiring authors and illustrators.
